Toxic Tom & Friends

Step 1: Building the Face

Step 2: Remove from Wighead

Papermache saves the day again when I need some victims of toxic/chemical burns. Click on the titles to see a full description of each step.

I used some clay to build up the features on this styrofoam wighead (eyelids, made the nose bigger, filled in the cheeks and jaws to make it more human-size).

I covered the entire head in tinfoil and then layered paper mache over top (torn strips of newspaper dipped in a mixture of glue and water - 2 parts glue, one part water).

Once it is dry, cut a slit along the back of the head and slide the paper mask off the wighead (in the picture, the wighead is on the right, the painted new head is on the left).

Once it is free from the wighead, you can use paper mache to reseal the back of the head (you may need to tape the two sides together).

Repeat as many times as you would like to create an army of heads.

Step 3: Paint

This is Toxic Tom. He was painted a light pink, then highlighted with yellows, browns and purples.

I cut slits in the skin to let the spiders crawl in and out of his face. I then gave him a quick coat of liquid latex (but as I have said before, this is not necessary).

And Paint Again

Sewn Face, or "Stitch Head" as Yetch likes to call her, was given the added detail of stitches threaded through her eyes and mouth. Nice. Just use a needle and thread.
