MUMMYCLOPS

This little guy is one of my favorite characters. A one eyed mummy that doesn't do much but turn his head back and forth. A perfect use for a standard torso frame with moving neck.

This one only needed a small version, so the vertical pieces were made a little shorter. He doesn't have a mouth so that was one less servo required for this little guy.

A couple of layers of 2" foam sheet were glued together and carved for the body shape. The leg padding and foot shape were made from "water wiggles" (similar to pipe insulation)

The head is simply a styrofoam ball with a painted ping pong ball for an eye. The wrapping was cut from sheets of batting material that came as packing in a machinery shipping case. (freebee) His neck has since been lengthened to look a little more like the movie character.
