Commercial Crystal Balls

In 2001 we considered a seance scene in the graveyard, but it never happened. This year we might do a little better; we already have a couple of crystal balls we might use.

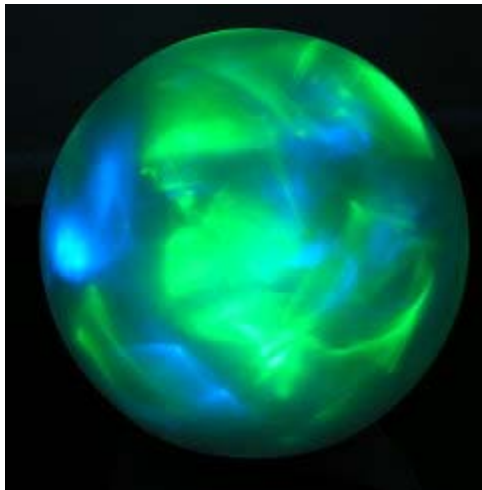

Fantasy Globe

This is a "Fantasy Globe", found on sale for $20 at Spencer Gifts in early 2007.

When turned off, it's just a white glass globe.

When you turn it on, moving colored lights are projected on the inside.

Mystic Lite

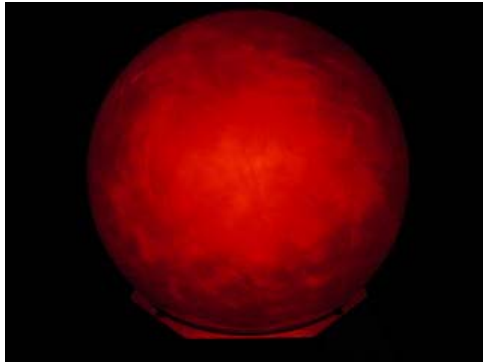

This is a "Mystic Lite", found on sale for $20 at Spencer Gifts in August 2002.

The sphere contains a translucent fluid and some solid material that is stirred up by a small motor. A small light bulb on a stalk extends up into the center of the globe.

There were only two colors available: green and blue-green. That's a pity; I would love to have one in blood-red. The globe is about 5 1/2" in diameter.

As of December 2003, the Mystic Lite is available in red! It's not quite what I would call blood red, but pretty good. The red globe has a chrome-plated plastic base. Blue and green still have black plastic bases.

This is the box from the August 2002 green Mystic Lite.

Crystal Ball Lamp

This "Crystal Ball Lamp" was purchased over E-Bay sometime in 2000.

It is filled with water and metallic flake confetti. The base contains a light and rotating color wheel that cycles through red, green, gold, and blue.

The globe is about 4 1/4" in diameter.

The box.
